. =section OpenVPN OpenVPN provides the user with the ability to tunnel through an arbitrary set of VPN connections. It is available as an SBC or as a wrapper around VirtualBox. OpenVPN is configured through sysconfig and all of the client configuration files are stored in a single directory. =section The Heart of the Matter: authz The authentication and authorization system in the architecture is based on the concept of a user's principal. There is an identity theory. There are three "templates" in the system which are set when the system is installed. =subsection User's Identity A user's principal (an application user) is configured on the system as a group name. The group name is used as an identity of the user. The user's principal can be configured per user or as a global configuration. =subsection User's Authority Every user in the system must have permission to access every service that requires authentication. The authority maps from a user's principal to the authority of the service the user can access. =subsection User's Resources The user's principal and the resources the user can access are presented as an "access list". The access list is a list of principals. It is scanned from first to last. Whenever a user principal finds a resource that matches it, it reports back to the access list. If the user principal is denied access to a resource, the access list is scanned again until either another principal or the end of the list is reached. Once the end of the list is reached, the access list is aborted. =section Server Configuration The server configuration is configured through sysconfig. The configuration is stored in a single configuration file, conf/ntp.conf. =section Building a User Authentication Architecture The building procedure is as follows: =item () build a system administrator. =item () build the access list from the permissions provided by the system administrator. =item () build the server configuration. =item () run the configuration: export KRB5CC=PATH_TO_KRB5CC export SEARCHPATH=PATH_TO_
