In just the first week of January, there were 11,213 new listings on the platform, with more than 57,000 pending offers. That's up from the 2017 numbers of 11,673 and 55,818. It's not even the first time this year that eBay Canada saw a spike in listings. Last year, the site saw growth of nearly 5,000 listings during the same month. 'I think there's an expectation that there's going to be growth,' an eBay Canada spokesperson told CBC News. 'The increases have been both slow and quick-rising.' The story is the same across other countries where eBay Canada has more than 100 million listings under management. But the issue isn't that eBay Canada is suddenly seeing large numbers of listings. In fact, the more listings the platform has, the more sales it has seen in the past. What's happening is that eBay Canada is losing listings. As of January 11, the number of active listings across the site is 6,529,000 — a reduction of 2.1 per cent since last year. The drop is occurring at the same time as the population of Canada grew 1.4 per cent over the last year, according to the most recent census. At the same time, online shopping continues to grow, which is consistent with national retail sales. Sales are up about five per cent year over year so far. That's combined with eBay Canada's recent expansion into new markets like Germany, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand. 'The growth has been significant and has been rising over time,' the spokesperson added. 'Our goal is to continue to innovate and add more services and support to
